Dr. Peter Hossler is Associate Professor of Urban and Community Health and Chair of Urban Studies at Rhodes College, where he also serves as Associate Director of the Institute of Health Equity and Community Justice. His work centers on health care for the uninsured and underinsured — how free clinics, community organizations, and the broader safety net reach people the health care system leaves out. He is a co-founder of the Wellness and Stress Clinic of Memphis, a free primary care clinic in the Oakhaven neighborhood that provides medical care, social work, and legal services to low-income and uninsured residents.
